

Brittany Griggs

My interest for the arts began as an adolescent in the home where my father spent much time creating. Soon, I began painting everyday. When not painting, I would fill my time with videos and books about the arts. I am a self-taught artist.

Thus far, my experiences have taught me that there is an ever-present duality. I am reminded of this truth over and over again throughout nature. When I listen to other people's philosophies on what is "right" and what is "wrong" I am reminded of this truth. I find this duality throughout our media, with opposing political views and beliefs on how to govern our modern world. My intention is to take these opposing views/beliefs/realities and use this to fuel my work. I wish to use my art as a voice to spread my message, to share my experiences of this ever-present duality. I wish to show through my choice of colors that the beauty we are so attracted to, is found in our differences.

I am currently residing in the mountains of Colorado, and have a studio in the small mountain town of Nederland where I create.
